

ALTHOUGH the new skyscraper was about 35 per cent occupied by Monday, there were signs of disarray on nearly every floor.

Wires dangled along some of the hallways. Crates of furniture were still unpacked.

Secretaries and clerks scurried from room to room trying to locate files that had been relocated in new desks and cabinets.

SHORTLY before the Municipal Court branches were moved in, a number of county offices moved over from the County Building.

The Zoning Board of Appeals and the Building and Zoning Department opened on

Vote For AUGUSTINE J.
BOWE

CHIEF JUSTICE
MUNICIPAL COURT

VOTE DEMOCRATIC

PRIMARY ELECTION

TUESDAY, APRIL 12, 1960

370

Presiding Judge Augustine J. Bowe of Municipal Court (right) showing one of the new courtrooms to (from left) Lybinh Hue, a justice of the Supreme Court of Viet Nam; his wife, and Mrs. Bowe.

City Courts Open In Civic Center

The 22 branches of the Municipal Court reopened Monday in their new quarters at the Civic Center, a block east of their old home at City Hall.

The court had been closed for 10 days during the move-in.

Workmen finished laying black, wall-to-wall carpeting in the courtrooms only several hours before judges and bailiffs showed up for work.

Several judges were elated at finding soft-cushioned couches in their chambers.

"Well, we finally have a place to relax when juries are out for several hours," one judge said.

the third floor. The coroner, auditor and county superintendent of schools transferred into the new building two months ago.

Robert Christensen, head of the Public Building Commission, said full occupancy of the building was expected by November.